

Is Your Estate Strategy Up to Date?

According to the National Association of Estate Planners & Councils, an estimated 120 million Americans don't have up-to-date estate strategies to protect themselves and their families in the event of illness, accidents or untimely death<sup>1</sup>. Are you one of them? If you haven't reviewed your strategy with an estate planning attorney in several years, you probably are.

Balance Transfers

Transferring your balance to a new card with a lower interest rate sounds like a great deal—and it is, if you pay off your balance before the interest rate skyrockets. The problem arises when you're tempted by the low or no interest rate to make purchases on the new card that you can't pay off promptly.

Signs You Need an Update

You should be aware of events that generally trigger the need for an estate review. Here are some to look out for.

Births

You probably will want to consider the needs of a new child or grandchild in your estate strategy.

Deaths

The death of your spouse or another beneficiary can greatly affect your strategy. So, too, can the death of your personal representative (executor), your children's guardian or your trustee.

Health Concerns

An important part of an estate strategy is protecting yourself and your family against your possible incapacity or death.

Marriages

If you marry, you most certainly will want to review your estate strategy. Also when your children marry, you may want to revise it.

Divorces

Most people review their estate strategies if they divorce. But many fail to consider the possible unintended consequences of a beneficiary's divorce on that beneficiary's inheritance. For example, if your will gives your son and his wife joint ownership in your home, think of the problems that could arise if they divorce and you don't revise your will.

Moves Out of State

If you move to a new state, your estate settlement could become more complicated, especially if you continue to own real estate in your “old” state. Consult with an attorney in your new state to learn more.

Changes in Estate Composition

A substantial increase or decrease in the value of your estate since you and your attorney designed your estate strategy may throw it off kilter and make a review or revision necessary.

Business Changes

Certain business changes signal the need for an estate plan review. These changes include starting, buying or selling a business; entering into a buy-sell agreement that provides for the sale of your business interest when you die; and the death of a business partner or another important member of your firm.

Tax Law Changes

On average, the tax law changes every couple of years. Any changes in the law may make your estate strategy outdated.

Review Your Insurance Coverage, Too

Because life insurance is an integral part of many people’s estate strategies, it’s important to review your coverage with your financial professional whenever you review your estate strategy with your attorney.

<sup>1</sup> Estate Planning Answers, the National Association of Estate Planners & Councils, October 2013

The information provided herein is for general informational purposes only and should not be considered an individualized recommendation or tax, investment, financial or legal advice. Each individual’s circumstances are unique and therefore, you need to assess your own situation and consult with your tax, financial or legal advisor before making a decision. The information contained herein is obtained from what are considered reliable sources; however, its accuracy, completeness or reliability is not guaranteed. The Plan Sponsor, Alight Solutions LLC and their respective subsidiaries and affiliates are not responsible for any errors or omissions or for the results obtained from the use of this information. In no event shall the Plan Sponsor, Alight Solutions LLC or their respective subsidiaries or affiliates be liable for any indirect, special or consequential damages in connection with the results of your use of this information.